Native Plant Talk by Mark Vande Pol

Mark Vande Pol has done extensive research on Native Plants of the Santa Cruz Mountains and has his own native plant garden. He is a fourth generation Californian and grew up in the Bay Area. His parents were Sierra Club members and took him car-camping at parks all through his early childhood. He is an engineering graduate of Harvey Mudd College. Mark and his wife built their home in the Santa Cruz Mountains with the desire to save a piece of California, as he knew it as a child. The goal is for the property to function as a laboratory to teach and develop the restoration process while learning more about how we might use and benefit from native plant management. Mark has written books about native plant management.
